Robinson Animal Healthcare to the Rescue in Egypt

Robinson Animal Healthcare, the leading manufacturer of animal first aid, woundcare and absorbents, has donated products to Egypt Equine Aid to help support the wonderful work they do helping horses, donkeys and mules at their purpose built equine hospital based in Cairo.

Egypt Equine Aid was founded in 2014 by Jill and Warren Barton with the aim of treating sick and injured working animals as well as providing education to enable their owners to take better care of their animals.

Many owners cannot afford essential veterinary care for the animals they rely on so much to earn a living, plus a critical lack of knowledge leads to animals suffering terribly.

The charity also run mobile clinics, offering dentistry and first aid, and education seminars for owners, vets and farriers, and they regularly hand out donations of head collars, saddle pads, and noseband covers to go over extremely uncomfortable chains owners often use.

Robinson Animal Healthcare donated Veterinary Gamgee®, wound dressings and Equiwrap® bandages; products that were soon put to good use helping a mare that came into the hospital with a shocking facial wound, the horrific lesions were caused by Hebronoma, a type of parasite.

The Veterinary Gamgee® was applied to protect the wound and minimise any further trauma, and was held in place using Equiwrap® bandages, proving the versatility of both products.

Charity volunteer Brimble Wharton said:

“Everyone at Egypt Equine Aid wishes to send enormous thanks to Robinson Animal Healthcare, not only for making the job of treating the horses much more efficient, but also for offering much needed comfort to the animals that work so hard.”
